1. Executive Summary

1.1 The Entrepreneur

Noxolisa Ruth Ndyalivani is a 39-year old highly motivated entrepreneur, born and raised in Khayelitsha, Cape Town. Currently, Mrs Ndyalivani resides in Bellville, Cape Town with her husband and 4 children. Noxolisa has 1 sibling who recently moved to Lesotho and her parents live in Malmesbury, Cape Town. In 2017, Mrs Ndyalivani completed an entrepreneurship course from the University of Stellenbosch and graduated as the top entrepreneurship student. She then proceeded to join more entrepreneur development programs around South Africa, one being from Gordon Institute of Business (GIBS) in Pretoria for 11 months and that opened opportunities for Noxolisa to visit other businesses and learn from them.

1.2 The Business

Noxolisa realized that street food restaurants at the time were selling unhealthy food to the locals, did not value customer service and food security standards were not met. That led her to launching her business formerly known as “Woow Foods”. Woow Foods is a restaurant located in all Cape Peninsula University of Technology campus student cafeterias. It is centered around serving healthier and affordable food to CPUT students and employees in all CPUT campuses around Cape Town. The business values quality, affordability, customer satisfaction and experience, by offering mouth watering food that will always be an unforgettable experience to customers. Additionally, Woow Foods offers catering services for CPUT workshops and events, as well as for other entities around Cape Town during weekends.

2. Business Profile

2.1 Core Business Information

Woow Foods was launched in August 2016 and operates in the food and hospitality industry. The restaurant offers a variety of comfort food, traditional food and home cooked meals. These include, kotas, vetkoeks, chip rolls, gatsbys, burgers, and a range of beverages. The reason why Woow Foods was established was to bring fresh, healthier, and more affordable alternatives to street food consumers, as well as exceptional customer service. When it first launched, the main products provided were steamed bread, coffee, and homemade muffins which were sold at a stall at a train station. This happened on weekdays for several months until it expanded to a mobile kitchen that would move around in several locations around Bellville including the University of the Western Cape.

The challenges Woow Foods faced at the time were law enforcement who required food trucks to operate in one location to be able to locate informal traders, and failure to comply would result in fines or having their kitchen moved away. In 2019, Woow Foods started operating primarily in CPUT alongside other food trucks, thereafter they received space to operate in the cafeterias within the University which is where they are currently located. The restaurant's main target market is the CPUT university population, which includes students and staff members.

2.2 Core Business Operations

Woow Foods has 8 employees within the operations of the business, which comprise of 70% females and 30% males. It mainly operates daily in the cafeterias situated on CPUT campuses including Bellville and Cape Town. The restaurant located on the Cape Town campus is usually the busiest and it operates daily from 7:30 am to 7:30 pm. On weekends, they receive catering jobs from the university as well as from clients outside the university. Other daily operations include maintaining the kitchen hygiene and safety standards, managing inventory, planning for catering events, as well as providing on-site staff during events.

3. Market Position

Woow Foods operates in the food and hospitality industry and is located in different CPUT student centres, including the D6 campus and the Bellville campus. The business caters for over 30 000 customers which comprises of students, lecturers and staff members who are enrolled and work in the Cape Peninsula University of Technology. Woow Foods competes with multiple similar businesses such as Sinako Soul Food, Cyngatha Cafeteria and others who are also situated within the institution, this leads to high competition as well as difficulties in retaining customers. However, the business has a competitive advantage because of their price sensitivity, quantity and quality of the food as well as their consistency which all contribute to the high retention of customers around the university.

4. Opportunities and Challenges

From our observation we have identified a few challenges and opportunities. ROI Consulting have realized that Woow foods only caters for CPUT students and we see an opportunity for the business to expand to other institutions such as the university of the western cape, Northlink college and other institutions. Secondly, we have realized that Woow Foods' google business profile is outdated as her working hours are from 7:30am to 19:30pm but on google it indicates that her operating hours are from 8am to 10pm. Additionally, we have noticed that there is no updated menu on any of their social media platforms. Thirdly, Woow Foods does not have any information about their catering services on their social platforms. Mrs Ndyalivani has mentioned that the business has been struggling with day-to-day operations and the business administrations. She also mentioned that the business has been struggling with staff retainment and recruitment as they have a high staff turnover. Lastly , the business faces challenges such as delayed payments from clients offered catering services.

5. Next steps

After conducting our research, ROI Consulting plans to set up a meeting with our client within the next week to gain clarity on some aspects of Woow Foods' internal and external operations, as well discussing any progress made with regards to the 80 Steps. Thereafter, we plan to meet with our client at least once a week to receive first hand experience on her business operations as well as crucial information for the SEE Model drafting, assisting in completing the 'in progress' and 'not started' 80 Steps. We plan to thoroughly review Woow Foods, with Noxolisa's assistance so we can figure out which goals or objectives we can begin working on in a prioritized manner.
